Legendary peacemaker to be Grand Marshal

Former U.S. senator and legendary peacemaker, George J. Mitchell has been selected as the Grand Marshal for the 255th NYC St. Patrick's Day Parade.

In 1995 President Bill Clinton named Mitchell as U.S. Special Envoy for Northern Ireland. He faced a monumentally difficult task in bringing Unionist and Nationalist representatives together. Without Senator Mitchell's patient leadership it is doubtful that the 1998 Good Friday Agreement could have become a reality.

Our President's Message

Dear AITA Members:

I am writing this with a deep appreciation of the privilege it is to be your president this year as we mark the centenary of Ireland's 1916 Easter Rising. I am writing, too, with the fervent hope that you will make every effort to help us celebrate this glorious milestone by marching with us on the St. Patrick's Day and joining us for a post-parade dinner at the Liederkranz. In 1916, when the 154th parade was held in NYC, the Irish Republican Brotherhood was just a little over a month away from proclaiming an Irish Republic. I can't imagine a more meaningful way for us to honor this history -- created in part by a schoolteacher, Padraig Pearse -- than to march in the 254th parade in 2016. Please join us.

With all my best wishes and ongoing gratitude for your support,

Doris Marie Meyer

THE YEAR OF COMMEMORATION 1916-2016

This year is the centennial of the 1916 Easter Rising, which began the long struggle for Irish freedom and independence. For those of us whose families lived through the dark days of struggle, the opportunity to celebrate the gallantry of the heroes, both men & women, whose sacrifices eventually led to the Republic of Ireland is now here. As customary, the AITA lists events of interest for our members. This year the events we highlight will primarily focus on the period of the Rising as well as the causes and aftermath of the crucial events of that history-changing era.

The following statement by Ann Garvey appeared in the Journal of the Mayo Society of Greater Cleveland

This year, Ireland will celebrate the centenary of the 1916 Easter Rising, a seminal event that began the long and painful journey toward Irish independence and the eventual establishment of the Irish Republic.

Events in Dublin and throughout Ireland will take place in connection with the centennial. The Irish Diaspora in Australia, Canada and New Zealand also has commemorative programs in the works. In the United States, Irish American communities around the nation are planning a variety of activities including parades, readings of the Irish Proclamation; a series of lectures and the publication of articles and books.

A United States commemorative stamp has been proposed by the American Irish Teachers Association (AITA), a New York based organization of educators.

The proposed stamp would celebrate the global influence of the American Declaration of Independence, influence that is evident in the 1916 Proclamation of the Irish Republic. On April 24, 1916 Irish patriots issued the Proclamation which established Ireland's claim to nationhood and independence.

The American Declaration of Independence is recognized for its great gift to all people in laying the foundation principles for a modern democracy, principles that influenced the aspirations of the authors of the Irish Proclamation which sets forth the ideals of the new Irish Republic, a vision of a democratic and inclusive government which resonate across the century.

The Proclamation specifically acknowledged support from America*. It should be mentioned that of the seven Proclamation signatories, five had ties to the U.S.: Tom Clarke was a U.S. citizen; James Connolly resided in the U.S. where he was a successful labor organizer; Patrick Pearse visited the U.S. on a fundraising mission for his bilingual secondary school, speaking in cities on the eastern seaboard; Sean MacDiarmada spent part of his youth in the U.S. and Joseph Plunkett visited the United States to meet with Irish American leaders in the world of politics and culture.

* Historians generally agree that without crucial funding and arms support and inspiration from Irish-America, the Easter Rising could not have taken place.

Status report on USPS 1916 Easter Rising commemorative stamp campaign

A look back at the campaign for a U.S. postal stamp to commemorate Ireland's Great Hunger offers a lesson for us on persistence and patience. It was only after years of intense lobbying by the Irish American community and outreach to secure the support of elected officials as well as the Citizens' Stamp Advisory Committee that the Irish Immigration Stamp was issued. It is doubtful that the 1989 US commemorative stamp for the French Revolution required similar effort.

Each of us who wishes to see a commemorative stamp issued in connection with the centenary of the 1916 Proclamation of the Irish Republic has a role to play.

With the lesson of persistence mentioned above, it is essential to write to the Citizens' Stamp Advisory Committee in Washington in support of the commemorative stamp. For a sample letter and contact information go to:

Religious and Cultural equality for 'all' but not for Irish-Americans

Recently, the NYC DOE established three new school holidays, two Muslim religious holidays and the Lunar New Year. These holidays were introduced with compassionate expressions of sensitivity for religious and cultural concerns of 'students and teachers.'

Why, then, did the same DOE schedule parent-teacher meetings for St. Patrick's Day?

In response to AITA past president Ann Garvey, the Irish Caucus of the City Council led by Councilman Danny Dromm wrote to DOE Chancellor Carmen Farina to protest the scheduling of parent-teacher meetings on St. Patrick's Day. Council members Jimmy Van Bramer, Elizabeth Crowley and Corey Johnson were signatories to this important letter. In addition, other community leaders are taking strong positions on this matter.

The Law firm, of O'Dwyer & Bernstein has filed a complaint with the city's Commission on Human Rights on behalf of Frank Schorn, a courageous NYC teacher. New York State Senator Tony Avella is calling for St. Patrick's Day to be made a school holiday.

O'Dwyer and Bernstein law firm has launched a Change.org petition urging the Department of Education to reschedule the date of parent teacher conferences. We urge as many of our members as possible to sign this petition at the following link:

We seek a speedy and permanent resolution.
